On occasion, I provide design services for private clients. None has occurred within Salt Lake County's jurisdiction, but there is a potential for this conflict. If any of my private work (JST Creative) occurs in Salt Lake County, I would recuse myself from any review, inspection, coordination and communication about said project that the County has jurisdiction over.

At times I review and approve structural building plans for building permits at Salt Lake County/MSD. As the Owner of Ellis Engineering I could potentially be asked to provide engineering services for someone in Salt Lake County and those plans could end up on my desk at the County for a building permit approval, which would be a conflict of interest. To avoid such, I do not knowingly take work from any client for projects that will be constructed in the ares of the unincorporated county or Townships within the county. I specifically ask each potential client about what jurisdiction they are in before talking to them about their project.
